Idaho's organic program

Welcome to another edition of the Idaho Certified Organic Directory. Idaho's diverse landscape and innovative people produce a wide variety of high-quality organic crops and livestock. This directory will assist you in locating organic products, producers, and handlers that provide the quality and service for which Idaho is known.

The State of Idaho began certifying organic farm products in 1990 and livestock in 2000. An Idaho State Department of Agriculture inspector conducts an on-site farm or handling/processing inspection. Depending on the type of operation, the inspection may include a field visit; soil/foliage sampling; review of equipment, storage and processing sites; as well as review of records detailing inputs, growing practices and/or handling/processing practices.

Look for the State of Idaho Organic Certification Seal on the organic certified products you buy as a symbol of the producer's commitment to organic farming. The Idaho Certified Organic label has the full force of law behind it as well as the support of the Idaho Organic Alliance, Idaho Feed Growers Association and the Idaho State government.

Where is the organic program headed?

The National Organic Program Final Rule was published in April 2001. In order for the Idaho State Department of Agriculture to continue to certify, as it has since 1990, Idaho must become accredited through the USDA National Organic Program (NOP). All Organic producers/handlers and certifying agencies had to be in compliance with the NOP by October 22, 2002. The application for accreditation was submitted to NOP in October 2001. In April 2002, the NOP accredited ISDA as a certifying agent. The Idaho Organic Food Products Rules, IDAPA 02.06.33 became effective in January 2002. These rules have incorporated by reference the NOP final rule.

IDAPA 02.06.33, Organic Food Products Rules have an exemption from certification for the organic producers/handlers with gross annual organic sales of $5000 or less. All producers/handlers must register with the ISDA and follow all laws and rules. In accordance with this statute, the director of the Idaho State Department of Agriculture appointed a 7-member Organic Food Advisory Council to advise the director on matters relating to the administration of the provisions of the Organic Food Products Law.

With the organic industry's dedication and ISDA's commitment, the organic certification program is alive and well in Idaho and moving into the future.
